Following a formal claim from those officers, the MPS has now accepted that the special escort allowance for royal protection officers had been incorrectly interpreted in previous years, and therefore the officers had been underpaid. "During 2016/2017 the MPS paid these officers the monies due to them, covering a backpay period of over six years." Police have blamed Government cuts for the rise in violent crime while Sadiq Khan, London's mayor, said police numbers in the capital had fallen from 4.1 officers per 1,000 Londoners in 2010 to 3.3 officers in 2016/17, adding: "Cuts have consequences." The Royalty and Specialist Protection unit was formed in 2015 following a merger of the Royalty protection Command with Specialist Protection Command. The elite unit requires round-the-clock close protection both in the UK and abroad. The BBC hit series Bodyguard, in which a fictional officer and former war veteran is tasked with protecting the home secretary - and then has an affair with her - gripped the nation although experts scoffed at its absurd plotlines. Officers received the escort allowance in recognition of the long and unpredictable hours. The Met refused to say what the allowance was worth. A spokesman said: "We would not provide details about the officers' specific roles or postings, except to say they were RaSP officers. We also wouldn't specify how much was paid." Accounts show payout for 47 officers from the Royalty and Specialist ProtectionThey were all given large one-off payments following a legal claim to Met PoliceUnit's 'special escort' allowance was scrapped in 2012, breaching their contractAt least £5m was paid out among the 47 officers, an average of £106,383 eachBy Alexander Robertson For Mailonline Published: 08:27 GMT, 1 January 2019 | Updated: 11:07 GMT, 4 January 2019 Protection officers tasked with guarding the Queen and other members of the royal family were paid £100,000 salaries after winning a pay dispute, it has been revealed.The latest accounts for the Metropolitan Police show 47 officers from the Royalty and Specialist Protection (RaSP) unit earned six-figures in 2016/2017. The Queen meets trooper Thomas Ephgraves, the son of one of her protection officers, and other members of the Household Cavalry at Combermere Barracks in Windsor (stock image)It comes after they were all given large one-off payments after winning a dispute with Scotland Yard over their 'special escort' allowance.The Met has not disclosed the exact payments, but at least £5million was paid out among the 47 officers, which works out at as an average of £106,383 each.According to the Telegraph, officers brought a legal claim against Scotland Yard after their 'escort allowance' was scrapped in a 2012 pay review. They claimed a breach of contract, and a settlement was reached where the officers received six years of backdated pay on the allowance, possibly with interest on top.RaSP provides personal protection for the royals and the other high-profile individuals, such as the Prime Minister and government ministers. They are also tasked with protecting visiting heads of state and ambassadors, and provide security at royal residences such as Windsor Castle and Buckingham Palace.The payout will be of grave embarrassment to the Met, amid complaints about budget cuts to policing.
